Illinois' Most Ancient Village Votes to Lift Ban Against Cigarette

CHICAGO, July 26.—Downer's Grove, the oldest village in Illinois, situated a few miles outside Chicago, voted on the question whether cigarettes are a menace to the community or merely instruments for the early removal of the wicked from this vale of tears. The voters repealed the ordinance passed last June which prohibited the sale of cigarettes.

Out of a population of a trifle over 2,000, exactly 503 cast their ballots against the ordinance, which was double the vote in favor of upholding the ordinance. One hundred and eighty-eight women voted on the proposition and their vote was 94 for and 94 against.

OLD RIVER BOAT IS NOW IN GRAVEYARD

Volunteer, Raised From Channel, Joins Other Ancient Hulks Doomed for Junk.

At that is left of the old river steamboat Volunteer, after months at the bottom of the harbor channel, is resting now in the maritime graveyard off Buzzard's point, adjoining Washington barracks, along with other ancient hulks that once graced the Potomac.

District engineer officers were content to let the Volunteer remain at the bottom of the harbor for years to come until recently, when it was discovered it was interfering with navigation.

On the night of February 5 last the Volunteer was taking a well-earned rest at its wharf, foot of Seventh street, after its return from a freight run down the Potomac. Without any warning it sank suddenly to the bottom. There appeared to be no obstruction of traffic—the Volunteer is only a ninety-footer—so the harbor police made no attempt to disturb its rest. During the last few months, however, the tide drifted it gradually out into midstream, and river pilots began to make complaints.

The District Engineer Department raised the Volunteer last week and towed the hull to the graveyard, where all good Potomac boats eventually go. It is in a pretty bad condition, fit only to be salvaged.

The Volunteer was well known in Potomac waters. For a number of years it engaged in freight and passenger trade between Washington and Virginia points, and was operated by the Potomac-Chesapeake Steamboat Company.

The Washington Chamber of Commerce also is considering the effect of the zoning regulations on business properties in the District. This will be the subject of discussion at a meeting of the building industries committee tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.
